Supreme Allied Commander Transformation (SACT), French Air Force General Stephane Abrial visited the Cooperative Cyber Defence Centre of Excellence (CCDCOE) located in Tallinn, Estonia, May 12.

This visit took place two days before the third anniversary of the centre's formal establishment on May 14, 2008. It was accredited by NATO October 28 the same year.

After a briefing by the Director of the CCDCOE, Estonian Colonel Ilmar Tamm, Abrial declared, "I'm very impressed by the great strides this centre has been making, assembling in just a few years such a mature and wide expertise on the multidimensional challenges of Cyber-Defence."

The CCDCOE is one of many NATO Centres of Excellence . Its mission is to enhance the capability, cooperation and information sharing among NATO, it's member nations and partners in cyber defence by virtue of education, research and development, lessons learned and consultation.

During a discussion with staff members of the CCDCOE, Abrial stated, "Above all, I am inspired by the forward-looking strategic work that I have encountered in the centre. I look forward to continuing our collaboration, and to providing any support within Allied Command Transformation's power."
